Course Description

In this course, students learn to apply different theoretical and disciplinary approaches to the study of contemporary issues in reproduction and fertility. Each week a different topic is examined from a multi-disciplinary perspective including social anthropology, biological anthropology, demography, biology, and other disciplines. Topics include love, hormones, and bonding; adolescent reproduction; reproductive loss (abortion, miscarriage, and still birth); childbirth; breastfeeding; infertility; contraception and contraceptive methods; and modification of the sexual body.
