Course Description

This course uses notable historical and contemporary case studies from art schools as the basis for a series of workshops and seminars. During the course students work with peers to collectively investigate what you learn in art school and how you learn it. You are asked to critically reflect on your own experiences in art school in relation to the educational turn in art practice and the contemporary visual culture theories that have supported it. The course culminates in you proposing your own new art education models.
