Course Description

This course covers important issues related to learning disabilities. The course examines definitions of and attitudes toward people with Autism, Down's Syndrome, and other intellectual disabilities. It explores a number of particular difficulties that people with learning disabilities experience, including communicating and establishing social and sexual relationships, and some of the resultant problems, such as sexual abuse and challenging behavior. Students consider the most recent social policy initiatives, with a focus on how services implement policy objectives (such as social inclusion and adult protection).
