Course Description

The words global and civil society have become part of the contemporary political lexicon. This course considers the relations between these two terms and asks whether there exists something called global civil society. The course shows how and why the concept of civil society has become disconnected with the traditional borders of the territorial state. The course reviews the notion of civil society and its globalization process by considering the role of NGOs, dissident groups in repressive regimes, laborers, campaigners, terrorists and fundamentalists.
