Course Description

This is part of the Laurea Magistrale program. The course is intended for advanced level students only. Enrollment is by consent of the instructor. The course offers a critical understanding of global health policy as a historical, political, and moral assemblage that deals with the consequences of global inequalities. The course addresses the issue of illness and suffering as the personal embodiment of broader social processes within local moral worlds embedded in historically deep and geographically broad social dynamics. The course focuses on the following issues: The cultural construction of the experience of illness, the social production of medical categories and the illness experience, the concept of embodiment and its theoretical outcomes, the concept of social suffering, and the anthropological contribution to the concept of global health.
