Course Description

This course offers a study of migration research through an anthropological lens. New analytical and methodological perspectives raise important questions concerning the social organization of migration as well as our understanding of the processes of socio-cultural continuity and change. The course examines how anthropological theory could potentially contribute to the conceptualization of the spatially and temporally extended processes that are set in motion by migratory movements. The course discusses the possibility of the creation of an ethnographic research practice that can encompass these complex processes.
