Course Description

This course examines historical changes in the patterns and meanings of violence globally. It focuses on individual, collective, and state violence in the Caribbean context. This course reviews the main theories explaining the causes of violence and current research on attitudes to violence and the use of force to bring about social and political change. Finally, it discusses the strategies of conflict management and prevention and their relationship to development and the transformation of political culture and state institutions that seek to monopolize the legitimate use of violence.
