Course Description

This course offers an overview of the history and politics of political regimes. It is divided into three sections: political regimes in the history of humanity; current political regimes; dynamics of political regimes. The first part discusses historical regimes from clans and tribes of antiquity through perestroika in the U.S.S.R. in the 1980s and 90s. The second part delves into types of current political regimes including parliamentary systems, presidential systems, monarchy, and military dictatorships. The third part explores the issues and changes that occur in political regimes including legitimacy, natural resources, transitions to democracy, and revolutionary processes.
