Course Description

This course examines contemporary policing. It focuses on policing in the UK, but takes a global perspective on its themes, and it examines some of the key areas covered by policing scholars including the significance of police culture, the police mandate and police powers, police discrimination and violence, police legitimacy and police accountability and control. The course focuses on different types of approaches, contexts and situations, such as those relating to counter-terrorism, diverse communities, gender, race and class. It pays careful attention to the rapid transformations in policing occurring at present, and has a particular focus on private policing and the impact of advanced digital technologies on police work and practice.
