Course Description

This course studies how American institutions, and more generally Western institutions, adapt to the rise of alternative forms of government that challenge the doctrines of globalization as we have known them to be since the end of the World War II. The course covers the following topics: the election of Donald Trump in the United States as part of the institutional history of that country; the election of Donald Trump as a departure from the status quo; the reaction of opposition forces; the message that the Constitution and the spirit of the Founding fathers tells us about how America society can adapt to this political break. The course measures how the constitutional texts combine flexibility and rigidity to keep democracy alive.
