Course Description

The rules of syntax determine which logical possibilities are sentences, while semantics relates to their interpretation. This course begins with an introduction to the philosophical and scientific background for the study of syntax and meaning. Next, fundamental syntactic categories and concepts, and their relationship to semantic notions are explored. Topics including the elements of lexical meaning, phrase structure, syntactic movement, and the computation of sentence meaning are explored within a theoretical context. This course serves as a basis for further specialization in fields including linguistics, philosophy, psychology, cognitive science, and computer science.
