Course Description

This course provides an overview of selected topics within general areas of human resource (HR) management, thereby helping students to be successful leaders in organizations. The course revolves around how to apply theories, policies, and practices to the real-world challenges of managing people in different work settings and occupations. At the end of the semester, students are expected to recall key HR concepts; apply HR-related knowledge to resolve management-related problems, and know precisely where the responsibilities of the HR department and line managers overlap and where they diverge.
