Course Description

The course provides a study of geographical and geopolitical understanding of the current world at various scales: global, regional, and local. It examines the theoretical and conceptual foundations of regional geography, main explanatory theories of the politico-territorial structure and conflicts of today's world, and the processes of regional division and differentiation at different scales, particularly as it relates to Europe. The course also analyzes some representative state and regional actors in terms of the uneven global distribution of power, namely the United States, China and Africa. Finally, it discusses bases and territorial conflicts of the Spanish "State of Autonomies." Students are expected to have completed previous coursework in geography.
