Course Description

This course analyzes the changes in contemporary France. It is firmly interdisciplinary, combining social history, sociology, demography, political economics, and social law. Each session looks at contemporary socioeconomic issues (poverty, immigration, etc.) from a long historical perspective. The upsets caused by two World Wars, the rising power of the working class and working women, the end of a rural life, the spread of social protections and consumerism, education for all, changes in taxation, transformation of gender issues, changes in immigration, the greying of society. The course identifies the invisible processes that forms new hierarchies in the heart of society.
