Course Description

This course examines the ethical dimensions of everyday life in Singapore. It focuses on moral dilemmas that arise in the nation's pursuit of happiness, prosperity, and progress. The course explores how moral reasoning from multiple perspectives applies to local concerns such as equality, meritocracy, multiculturalism, immigration, and marriage. This challenges us to identify moral problems created by social and technological changes, combine ethical principles with practical constraints, and balance the interests of individuals and communities. How moral dialogue can be cultivated in Singapore's multicultural society, so as to manage diverse traditions and divergent values, is also considered.
