Course Description

This course explores story, reading, and engagement with literature in the lives of young people. It is open to students from all disciplinary backgrounds. As the young adult fiction genre attracts more and more critical commentary, the course considers the literary text as a potent source of personal, philosophical, and educational meaning for young people and adults - as a potential locus for growth, realization, and emancipation. Engaging with an international scope of texts, including graphic novels and picture books, students consider educating through literature for literacy and for life. Students explore the responsibility of the text, the young reader, and the engaged adult, from pre-verbal through pre-literate to the formal educational relationship.
