Course Description

This course analyzes the dominant features of decolonization as a historical phenomenon that continues to mark much of the contemporary world. Through a close examination of the history of pre- and post-independence Algeria up to the present, students assess the nature of revolution, nation-building, contemporary Islamism, and the Arab Spring. In doing this, the course explores the interrelationship between the ideas, practices, and politics of decolonization, revolution, and their post-colonial legacies - both political and cultural.
