Course Description

The course examines major modes of explaining nationalism, and relates nationalism to other key themes in sociology. It begins by examining key concepts, theories, and typologies of nationalism, with particular attention focused on the distinction among ethnic, civic, and civil nationalism. Thereafter the course explores the relationship between nationalism and other social and political processes, such as language, religion, class, gender, conflict regulation, and globalization. The course uses substantive case material to inform an understanding of nationalism.
