Course Description

This course examines contemporary theories within anthropology and archaeology. Emphasis is placed upon the role of theory in these fields and the academic, political, and social contexts within which various theoretical approaches have developed. The course reviews the history of theoretical developments of anthropology and archaeology, and provides the necessary analytical frameworks within which students can understand contemporary theoretical trends within these fields. The course provides students with the skills to effectively read, understand, and assess current anthropological and archaeological literature on the basis of its theoretical stance.
