Course Description

This hands-on, practical journalism course provides an unrivaled opportunity to learn the craft of the foreign correspondent in the Czech Republic. Students discover what makes foreign reporting different from domestic reporting through practical application. Students focus on the issues foreign reporters frequently cover in the Czech Republic and other transitional countries including education, health, gender, history, the arts, corruption, politics, drugs, minorities, tourism, and intriguing personalities. Students have a chance to fine tune their news and feature writing, reporting and interviewing skills in four well researched-articles. Foreign reportage is continuously reviewed in a variety of media forms to see what can be gleaned from the best and the worst. Stimulating debates on style, ethics, and story structure are guaranteed. Guest speakers are foreign correspondents from outlets such as Bloomberg, the Wall Street Journal, and the BBC. There are visits to political hot spots (Parliament, Radio Free Europe) and possibly other sites representing journalistic areas of interest. The class is covered via lectures, reading material, class speakers, discussion, and field trips.
