Course Description

This course focuses on contemporary Islamic cultures and societies. It is intended for social science students wishing to understand the debates on the nature of Islam, exploring the unity and diversity of the Muhammadan faith by looking at Islamic cultures in their geographical and political contexts. The course starts with a general introduction to the anthropology of Islam. Each session then addresses a specific geographical area, starting with the analysis of an ethnographic text, introduced by the teacher, and followed by a class discussion of the key ideas. Classroom debates, fieldwork photos and videos are used to relate to each week's issues.
