Course Description

This course considers key issues of new technology, constitutional rights, and economic issues in the 21st century, with a specific focus on how new technology and constitutional rights interact. Many examples come from the US context, but focus is global, not exclusively American. Some topics include New York Times v. Sullivan, freedom of the press; Wikileaks, privacy, and government classified information; copyright and "fair use" doctrine; Net neutrality; intellectual property law background; Napster, Grokster, and ABC v. Aereo; and the future and the past, technology versus traditional values. Readings include relevant US Supreme Court cases, international law treaties, and leading scholars' articles.
