Course Description
This course introduces the basics of anthropology and its role within the humanities, and its relevance to modern-day society. It addresses the basic question of "why people do what they do": how our cultural and social shaping in large part makes us what we are as human beings. The course focuses on the similarities and differences in human societies and cultures, in order to promote a fuller and deeper understanding of the nature and meaning of being human in today's world. The course studies the cultures in Hong Kong, China, Japan, Western Europe, Africa and the Caribbean.
