Course Description

This course is an introduction to the field of comparative politics and introduces the central concepts in the field and evaluates them in specific contexts. In particular, the politics of the US, China, India, and Germany are analyzed. The first half of the course develops the core concepts of a political system and policy outcomes through a close reading of American politics. The second half uses the theoretical framework developed in the first half to analyze the German, Indian, and Chinese political systems, focusing on policy outcomes in the areas of nation-building, economic growth, and civic activism.
