Course Description

This class begins with an overview of political theories and philosophies then applies them to the broader concept of comparative politics. Extensive work is performed to cover the fundamental schools of thought of political philosophy. The course covers how political philosophy can be reflected in the formation and downfall of societies, then builds a basis to compare different political systems based on their founding philosophies. A 10-page paper must be completed by the end of the semester, studying an aspect of comparative politics of your choice.
