Course Description
Students enrolled in this physics course complete a scientific research project supervised by a faculty member from the physics or other similar department. Students are responsible for finding a supervisor and a project before applying to register for the course. All projects must be approved as suitable by the course instructor and respective supervisor. Students establish a base research schedule with their supervisor, consisting of the equivalent of nine hours of work per week and weekly meetings between the student and supervisor. Students explore or build something new for their research projects, present the results to class, and write a concise report.
