Course Description

This course examines interactive leisure forms and practices based on digital technologies. It understands digital media as a significant and expanding new media formation; one that is transforming both the content and economics of the culture industries. This course considers the cultural, political, and social implications of new forms of interactive media designed for leisure and entertainment. Topics include computer gaming, networked new media such as networked games, networked social spaces, pornography and other on-line entertainment. In addition, this course explores new forms of convergence between previously discrete media forms - for instance Net-TV collaboration and net-served films.
