Course Description
This course focuses on the emergence of Shanghai as one of the largest and most dynamic cities in modern China through an exploration of the city's economic structure and development, as well as local politics, taking into account the influence of factors like population diversity, western influence, and Shanghai's unique historical situation. The course examines all of the important geographical factors like early trade links and the role of treaty ports and foreign influence in the history of Shanghai. This serves as an underpinning for discussion and analysis.
