Course Description

This course takes a predominantly cultural approach to the study of cities and draws on a range of artistic sources (cinema, literature, art, and music) to analyze recent urban change in the context of globalization and post-industrial restructuring. The course also deploys approaches from social geography to demonstrate how social, economic, and political processes interact to create different urban geographies. Specific emphasis is placed on how identity categories such as class, gender, race, and sexuality inform cultural and urban landscapes. Students are introduced to theoretical perspectives such as Marxism, feminism, queer, and post-colonial theories.
