Course Description

This course offers an understanding of the psychology of criminal conduct. It investigates a range of perspectives from psychological literature that seek to shed light on crime and its commission. The course introduces knowledge regarding the measurement and distribution of crime in society and official responses with regard to crime prevention and investigation. It promotes an understanding of crime categories, offenders, and how a psychological understanding impacts prevention, rehabilitation, and treatment. It also offers an overview of applied professional practice in forensic and investigative psychology.
