Course Description

This course examines how the history of most societies is the history of ungendered men. This course sets out to explore how representations of the past change when gender relations, women, masculinities and femininities are used as categories of historical analysis. It examines specific issues in the history of Europe, Africa, and the Americas from a gendered perspective. The course also explores key debates in feminist historiography. Assessment: coursework (50%), and final exam (50%).
