Course Description
This course examines the challenges of promoting and protecting human rights in Latin America, focusing on the most important analytical and empirical debates since the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 1948. It also analyzes transitional justice policies in processes of democratization and discusses the following questions: What is the nature of human rights abuses in Latin America? How have countries in the region responded to past abuses? What is the role of NGOs and regional and international institutions in promoting human rights? What are the best policies to promote and protect human rights in Latin America today?
