Course Description

This course covers the historical background, geopolitical context, and current evolution of conflicts as well as the actors, their objectives, strategies, and evolutions. This program is based on a theoretical approach to international relations, geopolitics, geostrategy, and security, with historical, political, religious, ethnocultural, regional, and military elements. The main areas concerned are Sahel, Lake Chad region, the Horn of Africa, the Arabian peninsula, Iraq, South Asia, Central Asia, Russia, and Eastern Asia with elements from Latin America. The course is based on both scientific knowledge acquisition and critical analysis and includes exercises performed by the students. No particular prerequisites are needed, except basic knowledge of geography and international relations, as well as an appetite for conflict and security studies.
