Course Description
This course provides a study of the historical background and development of countries in Southeast Asia before World War II. Using a historic perspective combined with social sciences techniques, the course covers Southeast Asia's development from the earliest civilizations up to the Pacific War of 1941, the general pattern of its development, and the reasons behind the current state of affairs in the region. Topics include arrival of world religions, rise of classical states, age of commerce, warfare, early colonial regimes, gender and slavery, economic transformations, reform and westernization, World War I, anti-colonialism and nationalism, and the emergence of nations.
