Course Description

The contemporary regional order in Northeast Asia is characterized by alliances and territorial conflicts, security spirals and great power competition, economic interdependence and historical animosities, and, increasingly, technology that is changing the character of international relations. The course examines how the regional order came to have these features, what theories best explain it, what drivers are pushing its evolution, and the implications for peace and security in the future. The course blends history, theory, politics, technology, and policy to explore the sources and contours of regional security and insecurity in Northeast Asia. Text: Muthiah Alagappa, ASIAN SECURITY ORDER: INSTRUMENTAL AND NORMATIVE FEATURES. Assessment: participation (20%), presentations (20%), team project (10%), midterm (20%), final exam (30%).
