Course Description

This course deals with concepts, theories, and practices of global governance. Its central focus is on the understanding and analysis of discourses and policies created by international organizations such as the United Nations, the World Bank, or the International Monetary Foundation (IMF) in interaction with different state and non-state actors. the course covers how international legal regimes take form, operate, and influence actors at various institutional levels. Through case studies, the course analyzes practices of global governance specifically oriented towards solving societal, political, economic, and environmental challenges that require global collective action. Specifically, it explores how power relations and inequalities affect the practice of global governance. This course presents students with knowledge of global mechanisms (institutions, discourses, policies) created to address and manage the rising societal, political, economic, and environmental challenges of a global nature, with a particular focus on the Sustainable Development Goals formulated by the UN.
