Course Description
This course focuses on Babylonia, the heartland of Mesopotamian civilization in the south of present-day Iraq, from the dynasty of Hammurabi to the Seleucids (c. 1800 - 200 BC). This long-term perspective allows students to address questions of change while maintaining a sense of the continuity that marked the religious beliefs and practices in this region. Readings of primary text material (in translation) introduces students to the most important sources that are available for the study of this subject, while the secondary literature enables them to engage with current scholarly debates in this area during weekly seminars.
