Course Description

This course introduces the complex nature of the African continent from a wider interdisciplinary perspective. Topics include Africa's geo-political particularities; multiple histories; diverse languages, peoples, culture and music, and rich literary and artistic traditions. The course is also designed to give an overview of major theoretical debates on Africa such as the questions of nation-building or the perception of Africa. It will also shed light on the current economic and socio-political challenges that the continent faces as well as the opportunities it presents.
