Course Description

This is an advanced level French course for students who have completed three semesters of university level French. Certain fundamentals of the language are reinforced and completed in this course. Building on good comprehension skills, the course improves the ability to communicate in speaking and writing. The following skills are acquired within listening comprehension: understanding important points when clear, standard language is used on familiar subjects related to work, school, leisure activities; understanding the main point of a range of radio or television broadcasts related to current events or subjects of personal or professional importance provided that speech is relatively slow and distinct. The following skills are acquired within reading comprehension: understanding texts written in routine, daily language and/or related to studies or work; understanding descriptions of events, expressions of sentiments, or wishes expressed in personal letters and emails. The following is accomplished within expression: communication and interaction, ability to confront most situations that can be encountered during a trip in a region in which the target language is spoken, taking part without preparation in a conversation on familiar subjects or subjects of personal interest or that are related to daily life (for example, family, leisure, work, traveling, or current events). The following is accomplished within speaking skills: articulating expressions in a simple way to relate experiences or events, dreams, hopes, and objectives; briefly describing the reasons or explanations for opinions and plans; re-telling a story or plot of a book or movie and expressing reactions to them. Finally, the following writing skills are obtained: writing clear, detailed texts about a wide range of subjects related to personal interests; writing an essay or report by transmitting information or describing reasons for or against a given opinion; composing letters that emphasize the meanings that are personally attributed to events and experiences.
