Course Description
This course examines how the newly-installed Habsburg rulers began the slow process of recovering the authority of the crown, which by the seventeenth century had not only obtained a high degree of confessional uniformity within its territories but had also completed the expulsion of the Turks from Central Europe. Although this paper concentrates on kingship, confession and noble estates in Central Europe, there is some comparative study of relevant developments in surrounding territories. Students also examine the economic estates of peasants and townsmen, the alchemical and mystical concepts of government dominant in Central Europe at this time, the Turkish wars, and forms of government within the area of Turkish occupation.
