Course Description
This course addresses the long sweep of European history from the First World War to the present. While essentially chronological in structure, it hinges around the apparent contrast between the two halves of the century. Alongside this consideration of the overall narrative structure of 20th-century European history, students use a broad comparative approach to analyze specific themes of overall importance and explore how they emerged within particular national trajectories. The course ranges across Europe as a whole, cutting across distinctions of East and West, North and South, and encompasses a way of approaching certain events that draws out common features across the continent over the last century.
