Course Description
This course examines a momentous period of British political, social, and cultural history. Topics include imperialist conflict, the growth of nationalism, war, technological change, shifts in the relationships between the sexes, the development of consumerism, the creation of the mass press, the radio and cinema, the emergence of anarchism, socialism, communism, and fascism. Through various forms of literature, this course explores many of the key cultural issues of the period such as the changing notion of the subject; the development of "mass" culture and increased urbanization; the democratization of education; the consequences of science and technology; secularism; new attitudes toward gender, race, and sexuality; and definitions and re-definitions of Englishness.
