Course Description

This course will cover a broad range of relevant themes and historiographical debates associated with the economic and social history of capitalist development in industrializing countries, and aims to engage students with critical concepts relating to the study of economic history and social history. At the end of this course you should be able to demonstrate an awareness of the ways in which historians have examined and understood the economic and social history of Britain over the period 1700 to 1913; articulate key themes related to the emergence of capitalist institutions in modern Britain and Europe; confront how ideas of social justice and inequality shaped past societies; and to confidently analyze the relationship between people and institutions in their social and economic contexts.
