Course Description
This course encompasses some of the most dramatic events and developments in European and world history: the First World War, the rise of fascism and communism, the Second World War, and the Holocaust. It explores the reconstruction and recovery of Europe after 1945, both as a divided continent during the Cold War and in light of moves towards and challenges to European solidarity and unity. Furthermore, it considers shifting conceptions and geopolitical configurations of a continent in flux, as well as the global dimensions of European history throughout the century. While some sessions focus on particular European nations, others focus on key events or themes in comparative and transnational perspectives. The module thus provides an overall view of the history of modern Europe since the early 20th century and of the foundations of contemporary Europe.
