Course Description

In March 1990 the East German writer Stefan Heym feared that the GDR could wind up as "footnote in world history". As far as historiography is concerned, this prophecy turned out to be too pessimistic. The opening of the archives resulted in an upsurge in historical analyses of the East German state and thereby new insights into its politics, culture and society. However, the availability of new material did not result in historical consensus about the nature of the socialist system. The revival of totalitarian theory, with its focus on the instruments of repression and control, was challenged by models that sought to understand GDR society from the inside, as a 'participatory dictatorship' (Fulbrook), in which individuals negotiated a 'normal life' within the boundaries of the regime. Nevertheless, focusing on cultural aspects of the GDR run into danger to downplay the ever-present confinement and the subtle practices of intimidation. The seminar aims for a holistic approach to the history of the German Democratic Republic. Hence it covers political, economic, social and cultural issues as well.
