Course Description
On this team-taught course, students consider the relationships between literary texts and their various retellings, across the boundaries of form, genre, media, context, language, and tradition. The course covers concerns such as literature in translation, retellings and reworkings, allusion and parody, the production and circulation of texts, and literature on film. It also addresses other key factors in the lives of a text, including questions of authorship, manuscripts and editions, and the evolution of its critical reception. Using a number of significant texts from the Classical to the contemporary periods, the course incorporates many different genres from various disciplines, draws upon a range of authors from diverse backgrounds, and explores the journeys texts make across cultures and time periods.
