Course Description
This course introduces students to the rich, diverse, and innovative drama of Irish playwrights in the 20th century. It charts the movement in Irish drama from the creation of the national theater movement at the end of the 19th century to the present day. Plays ranging from the works of Lady Gregory and W.B. Yeats to those of Brian Friel and Marina Carr introduce students to the social, political, and cultural tensions, complexities, and motives inherent in the making of modern Irish theater.
