Course Description

This course focuses on organization theories, with the aim of strengthening the analytical skills of the participants and enabling them to assess peoples' behavior in work environments, organizations' forms and structures and the root causes of their performance. This is a highly useful skill to cultivate for a wide variety of managerial roles and positions (marketing, operations, HR, finance & accounting, etc.). It is indispensable for working in a start-up or in a family business, for managing a company, consulting, auditing, and even investment banking. This course includes a Group Field Project (GFP) with the aim of giving the opportunity to apply theory to reality and, in particular, to real organizations. Each group will find an interesting company or other type of organization and analyze it from an organizational frame, using the concepts and the models that are presented during the course.
