Course Description

This class covers the history of social and political thought in Latin America from the 19th century to the present. It examines history of Latin American thought of the 19th century through the main trends represented in Latin American liberalism and positivism, which concludes in the ideological and political confrontation between Latin Americanism and Pan-Americanism. The course discusses the theoretical, political and ideological constructions of Latin American thought during the 20th century and considers the regional debate on the alternatives and paths of new Latin American critical thinking in the 21st century.
