Course Description

This course highlights the core processes for developing theory-and evidence-based interventions. Several topics in the field of applied psychology are discussed, for example obesity, sexual behaviors, but also topics like traffic safety, and pro-environmental behaviors. Additionally, students are provided with applications of more fundamental insights (e.g., emotion regulation, stigma), and first-hand examples of existing behavior change programs: from problems they target and who are involved, to theory and empirical evidence, to development, implementation, and evaluation.
